College writing courses at Missouri Western (ENG100, ENG104, and ENG108) are sequenced courses; goals and objectives echo and reinforce each other. Please read the goals and objectives for ENG104 carefully.

In addition to topical readings (Consumption, Advertising, Identity, Technology, Television, Movies, and Media Dreams), you will be reading essays using Narration, Description, Exemplification, Process, Cause and Effect, Comparison and Contrast, Classification and Division, Definition, and Argumentation. For each weekly writing, you are expected to analyze the readings in relation to these rhetorical modes.

Each essay will be worth potentially 10 points (60 points of total grade); you will receive a score based on organization (3), Content (4), and grammar and mechanics (3). Submissions with sentence fragment(s), run-on sentence(s), or comma splice(s) will be deducted 3 points. You really must proofread your submissions. Papers without meaningful assessment of the appropriate rhetorical mode will also lose points. To receive the 3 points for organization, use the template and in-text citations. You must provide both a summary and an evaluation.

The midterm and final essays each will be worth potentially up to 20 points (6 points for organization, 6 points for grammar and mechanics; 8 points for content).

In addition, the course references several tutorials and videos designed to help you in all three areas of your writing: organization, content, grammar and mechanics. You are expected to spend time within these materials. Moodle keeps an accurate record of all the items you access.
